Ticks

What are ticks?

Ticks are slow-crawling, wingless vermin that feed solely on human and animal blood. Of greatest concern in our geography are hard ticks. They are usually found just a few inches or feet off the ground on vegetation. The tick species most commonly encountered infesting people and animals in our geography are the lone star tick, the American dog tick, and the blacklegged tick or deer tick.

Are they dangerous?

Yes, the black legged or deer tick is known to vector Lyme disease. The American dog tick and the lone star tick are a known vector of Rocky Mountain spotted fever and can cause paralysis. How do you get rid of ticks?
